JAY PUTTY

Cinematic music for yearning hearts.

Folk-Pop / Cinematic Pop

The Story

Jay Putty writes cinematic folk-pop for the yearning and the hopeful — songs for slow-motion heartbreak and secondhand butterflies, for readers who dog-ear the angsty chapters and replay the almost-kiss a hundred times over. The music borrows its architecture from romantasy and dark romance: longing turned into landscape, candlelit and string-laced and a little bit dangerous.

Every release is its own small mythology — a love that asks for everything, a memory that won't stay buried, a heart that keeps choosing the wrong door on purpose. Folk at the bones, cinematic in the blood, built for the parts of love that never make the highlight reel.

This is where the rest of the story goes — where Jay grew up, how the music started, and the milestones and releases that got things here. Replace this paragraph with the full story before sending to press.
